SLIDING IN STREETS

DANGEROUS

Children who make a practice of sliding in the streets are taking a chance not only on their own safety but on the safety of motorists who must give their cars through fancy contraptions to avoid running down the children. Frequently it is difficult, if not impossible, to see the children until the motorist is almost on top of them.

While the glassy roads are great temptation, sliding should be confined to hills that are not traveled by cars.

Mr. Smith, Giber representative, announced Thursday afternoon at a meeting attended by many such a move, Mr. Smith said. A

Almost a thousand acres were sold.

Satisfaction with the growing of peas for the century has been indicated by a steady increase in the number of farmers becoming interested. The crop is sold with alfalfa as a nurse crop; good growth for the winter. Another feature of the pea vineyard after the Editorial

Christmas, the season when people lose themselves in the sheer joy of giving, is with us again. Each year it is as though a new foundation of joy bubbles up, and man, who is ordinarily thoughtless and selfish in his everyday pursuits, is imbued with the miracle of Christmas. He breaks through his hard crust and emerges, a person full of generosity and good will. He speaks well of his neighbor, he reminds us of the reason for his giving, for he exchange of gifts, for the recalling of old friends with the joy of giving, is with us again. Each year it is as though a new foundation of joy bubbles up, and man, who is ordinarily thoughtless and selfish in his everyday pursuits, is inspired with the miracle of Christ.

There really is little danger of the nation at large forgetting the significance of the day itself simply because their apparent self-interest is strong. As for the exchange of gifts, for the recalling of old friends with the joy of giving, is with us again. Each year it is as though a new foundation of joy bubbles up, and man, who is ordinarily thoughtless and selfish in his everyday pursuits, is inspired with the miracle of Christ.
